

Colour in a helmet

This helmet is on display in the permanent exhibition Lives and Landscapes.

The helmet, sometimes called a 'lobster pott', was used by the cavalry of both sides during the Civil War of the 17th century. Its name comes from the back of the helmet, as this part is thought to resemble a lobster's tail.

Using felt tip pens or colouring pencils, colour in the helmet.

